Andrea and Trevor. Imagine one day you're practicing your scales, when suddenly, part of your C minor harmonic scale starts to sound really cool. Before you know it awesomeness occurs! But your piano teacher notices that you've strayed! She shouts, "That doesn't sound like scale practice!", and it's back to technical work until you just can't resist again and again! In

Utterly Unique. Robin Steinweg Sep 09, 2016 Professional Development, Teaching Tips No Comments. Other teachers said these things to me recently: "I'm just a small-town music teacher." "It's all been taught before." "I don't say anything new. It's all been said before." But not by you. You and your teaching are utterly

Meet Trevor & Andrea. Back in 2005 our music studio of 350 students was receiving 3-5 inquiries a month from parents wanting to sign their 3, 4 or 5 year old children up for piano lessons. We were reluctantly turning these students away for lack of a real program to teach piano to very young children. Around the same time, we were being inundated online and in the print media with studies
