To that end, the Architectural Graphics 101 series was born. There isn't anything special about the topic I have selected for the very first entry in this series - in fact - I've almost gone the opposite direction and chosen something pretty vanilla as a starting point. If people seem to respond well to this series, I will continue them every other week or so.

Hopefully, this Architectural Graphics 101 entry on Layers will address all of your burning questions. As I mentioned at the top of the post, writing this post was something like taking the architectural registration exam - you won't like it but if you want to be taken seriously, you have no choice but to suck it up and get on with it. I am happy to take one for the team and share my layer
