Black landscapes matter. Or they should — but centuries of oppression followed by disinvestment have led to the erasure of many places important to Black history, and the histories behind them. That must change. If spaces and landscapes are to reflect America as it is, then America as it is must be able to see itself in America's spaces and landscapes.

Bing: Black Landscapes Matter

Black Landscapes Matter enters at a time when a critical conversation about the centering of Blackness, Black spaces, and making Blackness visible is urgently needed to inform and construct a new, inclusive design canon that properly educates both designers and the public about our legitimacy in the making of American landscapes and our demands to feel free within them. The longer we keep these spaces and narratives invisible and neglected, the longer our journey towards reckoning, healing
